Michigan State University
Archaeological Field School
Anthropology 464:
Field Methods in Archaeology
May 21 – July 1, 2012
Instructor: Dr. Jodie O’Gorman

We will excavate a late prehistoric village in the central Illinois River Valley near Lewistown, Illinois. This cooperative project with the Illinois State Museum focuses on the A.D. 1300-1400 community associated with a period of social integration and conflict among Oneota and Mississippian groups.

Fees: Students register for 6 credits and there is an additional $750 course fee that includes food, lodging, and lab fees.

Student Eligibility: Students presently attending any college or university may apply as well as life-long learners. Previous introductory anthropology, archaeology or related course required.

To Apply: Application and further information available via e-mail at ogorman@msu.edu. Field school web page at anthropology.msu.edu

Deadline is March 12 or until the class is full.

Unique Learning Experience:
- Excavation, survey, laboratory, classroom and museum study, field trips, guest lecturers, inter-disciplinary research
- Learn survey and excavation methods
- Class size limited to 15 students
- Six credits - undergraduate or graduate level
- Additional credits available for subsequent laboratory work and research possibilities